SplashLink to Provide Relief to Communities Impacted by the Water Funding Crisis

Cleveland, OH March 22nd, 2017 – SplashLink, water’s online platform, announced that in response to the uncertainty around the future of government funding programs, it will provide 1,000 free subscriptions to utilities and municipalities.

With water infrastructure continuing to degrade, and previously reliable sources of funding now in jeopardy, SplashLink wants to connect the nation’s water suppliers with the over $8 Billion in funding currently available on the SplashLink Platform. “We are thrilled to be able to supply utilities and municipalities with the essential tools they need to provide their communities with high quality water,” said Ebie Holst, SplashLink Founder and CEO. “With the inclusion of some of water’s largest nongovernmental funders, we can bring them access to funds that can be deployed immediately.”

SplashLink is the leading source for accessing water and wastewater funding and project opportunities on the global market. To gain a year free of SplashLink services, a water or wastewater utility or municipality need only register at SplashLink.com to post a project or bid opportunity through SplashLink’s self-service posting portal. The portal will post RFPs, projects, and planning/design requests for response from both local and global solution providers. Once a project is posted, the poster will receive a code from SplashLink awarding them a 1-year subscription.

“We wanted to do our part to help water suppliers survive, and even thrive, in what otherwise is looking to be a difficult funding environment.” said Jason Wuliger, SplashLink Co-Founder and Vice President. “We want to provide those responsible for maintaining our infrastructure with access to the funds they need to maintain healthy communities and a safe and efficient treatment process.” SplashLink’s 1-year subscription will also provide access to the Directory of Expertise, the largest online database of water professionals and solution providers.
